Quotes by James Russell Lowell Lilith Regan,2020-04-05 And what is so rare as a day in June? Then, if ever, come perfect days; Then Heaven tries earth if it be in tune, And over it softly her warm ear lays. One thorn of experience is worth a whole wilderness of warning. Once to every person and nation come the moment to decide. In the conflict of truth with falsehood, for the good or evil side. Not what we give, But what we share, For the gift without the giver Is bare. Not failure, but low aim, is crime. They are slaves who fear to speak, For the fallen and the weak. Books are the bees which carry the quickening pollen from one to another mind. All the beautiful sentiments in the world weigh less than a single lovely action. As life runs on, the road grows strange with faces new - and near the end. The milestones into headstones change, Neath every one a friend. The heart forgets its sorrow and ache.

James Russell Lowell Horace Elisha Scudder,1901 A biography of James Russell Lowell, an American Romantic poet.

James Russell Lowell: A Biography (Abridged, Annotated) Horace Elisha Scudder,1901-01-01 Witty, bittingly satirical, erudite, and passionate, James Russell Lowell was one of the great literary and intellectual, giants of the 19th century. Though his name today is less well-known than Hawthorne, Poe, Longfellow, and Emerson, he was their contemporary, peer, and friend. He was the editor of The Atlantic Monthly who set the early tone and style for that magazine. A Harvard graduate and prolific essayist and poet, he was later a U.S. diplomat to Spain and England. This two volume, long out-of-print set will keep you entertained from beginning to end. Lowell's wonderful intelligence and wit are on display throughout. You will see why The Atlantic became the important magazine that it still is. His friend and biographer, Horace Scudder was also editor of The Atlantic. For the first time, this long out-of-print volume is available as an affordable, well-formatted book for e-readers and smartphones.
